FALL 2013 RELIGION COURSES

HBR1102/RLG5204   Beginning Biblical Hebrew   Dr. Levenson
In HBR 1102 and 1103 you will study virtually the entire grammar and gain a good working vocabulary of Biblical Hebrew. After the completion of HBR 1103, you will be prepared to read any portion of the Hebrew Bible with the aid of a dictionary and commentary. During the course of the year, approximately six chapters from the Bible will be read and students will be introduced to the standard reference tools used in the analysis of the Hebrew text (lexica, concordances, grammars, critical texts, commentaries, etc.). Since the basic grammar and vocabulary of Modern Hebrew are substantially the same as Biblical Hebrew, the course can also serve as a basis for the study of the contemporary language. To facilitate the transition to Modern Hebrew, the pronunciation current in Israel will be adopted, there will be oral/aural drills (though no significant conversation) and the cursive form of writing will be introduced gradually.

The sequence of HBR 1102, 1103 (Spring 2014) and 2222 (Fall 2014) fulfills the College of Arts & Sciences language requirement. A three-course sequence in Modern Hebrew (HBR 1120, 1121, 2220), which also fulfills the language requirement, is offered by the Department of Modern Languages. (It is possible to take both Modern and Biblical Hebrew). There is now a Hebrew Minor for which some Biblical and some Modern Hebrew are required. For details about the minor and other information about Hebrew at FSU, see http://www.fsu.edu/~modlang/divisions/hebrew/courses.html

HBR2222/RLG5204   Intermediate Biblical Hebrew   Dr. Levenson
A close reading of the Joseph narrative (Genesis 37, and 39-45) and brief selections from poetic and legal texts. The primary emphasis will be on vocabulary, grammar, and style, but some attention will be given to issues of textual and source criticism. There will also be exercises that will provide a review and solidify the grammar and vocabulary from Biblical Hebrew I and II.
Prerequisite: Two semesters of Modern or Biblical Hebrew.

REL1300   Introduction to World Religions   Staff
This course is an introduction to the academic study of the major religions of the world. The course will cover the religious traditions of Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism, Taoism, Zoroastrianism, Judaism, Christianity and Islam. In the process of comparing the religions of the world, it will be the responsibility of each student to think critically about the historical evolution, systems of belief, ritual practices, institutional developments and cultural expressions of each religious tradition. A range of reading materials and writing assignments have been chosen to provide a framework within which to engage a variety of religious issues and to understand the significance and relevance of religion in world history. This course is now also offered online!
REL2121 Religion in the U.S. Staff
This course is designed to introduce you to the major themes, figures, and directions of religion in American history, with an eye toward ways that social and cultural contexts have shaped the religious experience of Americans in different places and times. Since it is impossible to cover all religious traditions in one semester, this course will consist of both a general survey of religion in the U.S. and a series of case studies designed to provide a closer look into some of the religious groups and ideas that have shaped this country.

REL2210 Introduction to the Old Testament Staff
The word “Bible” is derived from the Greek word “biblia” which means “books.” While revered as a single book, the Bible is a collection of many texts that were composed by different authors at different times for different reasons. This course is an introduction to the critical study of this assorted literature and the world in which it was produced. We will examine individual texts of the Hebrew Bible/Old Testament within their historical contexts while taking into consideration other methodological approaches such as literary criticism and theology.

REL2240 Introduction to the New Testament Staff
An introduction to the literature of the New Testament and to the academic approaches to it. The distinctive concerns and literary features of individual texts will be studied in the contexts of the historical development of the early Christian church, ancient Judaism, and the wider Greco-Roman world. Emphasis throughout will fall on the variety of interpretations of the Christian message as Christians encountered new social circumstances and theological challenges.

REL2315 Religions of South Asia Ian Reed
Overview of religions in the South Asian cultural region, emphasizing Hinduism, Buddhism, Jainism, Sikhism, and Islam. The history and cultural contexts of these traditions will be explored with particular attention to sacred stories, holy people, religious leadership, and gender issues. This course also serves as an introduction to the academic study of religion. No previous background is required. Students will gain familiarity with the basic concepts of the religious traditions of South Asia, will develop interpretive skills in the academic study of religion, and will have the opportunity to develop research and writing skills by exploring a topic of special interest. Meets Liberal Studies Humanities and Multicultural (x) requirements.

REL3112 Religion and Fantasy Dr. Cronin
This course offers an overview of theological and anti-theological elements in twentieth and twenty-first century fantasy literature from authors Lewis, Tolkien, Rowling, and Pullman.

REL3128 Religion & American Prisons Brad Stoddard
At roughly 5% of the global population, the United States incarcerates over 25% of the world’s prisoners. How did this happen, and how is religion related to the carceral state? This course explores the evolution and history of prisons in America, paying particular attention to the intersections of race, gender, the economy, law, and religion.

REL3128  Religion & American Law  Michael Graziano
This class examines the relationship between religion and law in American history. Throughout their history, American citizens have understood the connections between religion, government, and the individual in a variety of ways. This course tracks many of the major movements, ideas, and people in this history. Of particular interest will be groups that have sought to reshape this relationship in different ways, including the Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses, and the Church of Scientology.

REL3142  Religion: Self and Society  Dr. Day
This course is structured around the principle that we should abandon the habit of treating some discourses or practices as being irreducibly distinct from mundane political and economic life. Rather, we must learn to recognize how the behaviors commonly identified as tokens of “religion” represent a form of politics that has been strategically represented as non-political in nature. Figures discussed will include John Locke, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, J.S. Mill and Carl Schmidt.

REL3145  Religion & Gender  Dr. Kalbian/Staff
This course examines the impact of gender on religious beliefs and practices and the impact of religious beliefs and practices on gender, cross-culturally. We will be looking at the intersections of religion and culture, in general. In doing so, we will look at a history of feminist thought in religious studies and the current gender issues that have arisen through women’s examinations of religious thought and the study of religion. We will use a variety of texts, some film, class discussion, and writing to explore these topics a fully as possible.

REL3170  Religious Ethics  Dr. Kelsay/staff
Religious Ethics: In this class, you will get the chance to examine the moral problems raised by issues such as war, capital punishment, lying, the environment, and sex in the context of religious views about love, duty, good, and evil (yes, this is the big stuff). This introduction to the study of religious ethics meets the Gordon Rule, liberal studies area IV and the multicultural x requirement. Questions? Contact Dr. John Kelsay at jkelsay@fsu.edu (Chair of the Department of Religion).

REL3171-01  Topics in Ethics: Human Rights  Jeffrey Gottlieb
This course examines the history and dynamics (including the role of religion) of crimes against humanity as an introduction to the international human rights movement. It will do this by focusing on two historical cases (with historical outreach)—the Belgian Congo in the early 20th century and the Holocaust at mid-20th century—both of which spawned a considerable literature of testimony, analysis, resistance, and reform both at the time and subsequently. Course materials will include works of literature, drama, history, and philosophy as well as essays, public addresses, letters, and other creative works by prominent figures in the humanities, arts, social sciences, and law. A major thesis of the course—to be cooperatively tested by us all—is that by focusing on such works we will not only become familiar with human rights thinking and practice but also be encouraged to acquire a critical and imaginative human rights sensibility for being responsible citizens in the contemporary world.
Thinking about food... why we eat what we eat (and don’t eat), how our food is produced, the ins and outs of GMOs; and our social connections with food. If you’re looking for a class that’s both eye-opening and relevant to almost every aspect of your life, Ethics and Food is for you! We will be exploring food and religious tradition, ethics and industrial agriculture, and the morality of food advertising, along with other topics such as water wars and the World Bank.

This class is an analysis of the Gospel of John in the light of the wide variety of methods - literary, historical and sociological - currently employed in Johannine studies. It will examine John in light of Hebrew Bible, Jewish Tradition, Greco-Roman literature, and other writings in the New Testament.

Prerequisite: REL 2210 (Introduction to Old Testament) or REL 2240 (Introduction to New Testament).

This course introduces the Hindu tradition through the Ramayana, one of its most popular and celebrated sacred texts. The Ramayana, also known as the Rama-katha (story of Rama), narrates the exile of Prince Rama, who is accompanied into the forest by his wife Sita and brother Laksmana. After Sita's abduction by the demon Ravana, Rama, aided by his monkey-ally Hanuman, must go to battle to rescue her. But this skeletal summary cannot begin to do justice to the many tellings of Rama-katha that have been composed, recited, sung, written, performed, danced, portrayed in art, and have influenced political events throughout India, Asia, and beyond. In this course, we explore primarily the most well-known literary version, composed in the Sanskrit language by the ancient poet Valmiki, as well as the now classic 1980s televised Hindi language serial version directed by Ramanand Sagar, though we also consider other versions. Focus on the Ramayana leads to analysis of broader religious, philosophical, aesthetic, and political themes in the Hindu tradition and Indian culture. Film is an integral part of the course; there will be several Ramayana-related feature length films screened on Tuesday nights throughout the semester. No background in either the Ramayana or in Hinduism is presumed.

This course is a historical and thematic survey of Buddhism from its beginnings through the modern period. Topics covered include origins and history, doctrine, ethical beliefs, meditation, ritual, and monastic and popular traditions. Some attention will also be given to contemporary forms of Buddhism in America. Part I of this course begins with some foundational concepts in Buddhism. Part II explores the Buddhist schools, theories, and practices in different regions of the world and over a span of 2,500 years.

REL 3363 Islamic Traditions is a historical and topical survey of Islam as a religion and civilization that focuses on the formative and classical periods of Islamic history. The course is primarily concerned with: the life and career of Muhammad the Prophet of Islam, the scriptural sources of Islam (i.e. the Qur’an and the Sunna), the development of the Muslim community and its principle institutions (schools of thought, law, theology, cultural life and mystical traditions). The course will acquaint you with significant aspects of Islam as a religion, and to help you think through some of the basic questions of human religious experience in light of the responses given to those questions by the great sages and saints of the Islamic tradition.

REL3431  Critics of Religion  Tamara Marks

This course is an introduction to the major thinkers and texts in the critique of religion as it developed in the 19th and 20th centuries in the west. Beginning with Schleiermacher, the course moves on to consider the so-called "masters of suspicion"--Feuerbach, Marx, Nietzsche, and Freud. By means of a close examination of central texts, students explore the meaning of a critique of religion, the structure of religious consciousness, the place of religion with respect to other forms of culture, the problem of religion and alienation, and the possibility of a critical faith.

Meets LS Humanities, Writing requirement

REL3505  The Christian Tradition  Staff

This course is an introduction to Christianity. We will examine the historical narrative of the tradition from its beginnings in the first century through twentieth-century developments. We will also focus on the doctrinal side of the tradition by reading primary texts of key Christian thinkers.

REL3936  Love, Sex & Religion  Staff

What do we talk about when we talk about love in a Christian society? Are sacred and profane love contradictory or complementary? If chastity is the desired state that Christians should pursue what is the value of married life? Can priests be married men? How should sexuality be viewed in and out of wedlock, between members of opposite sexes and of the same sex? To these questions that haunted Christian thinkers since the time of the Fathers the Gregorian reform of the medieval Church had brought seemingly definitive answers that imposed patterns of behavior at all levels of Western society, from kings to serfs: matrimony became a sacrament based on the freedom of the spouses, priests could not marry or have concubines anymore, canonical penalties against adulterers and sodomites were harshened.

“Love sex and religion in the early modern West” will introduce students to the gradual undoing of medieval conceptions and to the emergence of a patriarchal order of personal behavior in sexual matters, fostered by the Protestant Reformation and the Catholic Counter-Reformation alike, that represented a major and durable change in European attitudes and sensitivities. Between the time of the Trecento Italian humanists Petrarch and Boccaccio – authors of the Canzoniere and the Decameron, two well-known classics of the literature of love, as well as theological and spiritual texts - and that of Milton in 17th century England – the poet of Paradise lost was also the author of a famous tract on divorce -, theologians, jurists writers and artists redefined patterns and motifs of human sexuality in the light of reformed models of Christian life. Taking into account the considerable body of work produced by demographer historians of early modern Europe during the last fifty years (Peter Laslett, Pierre Chaunu etc.) on familial structures and sexual practices, we will thus draw on a great variety of documents from religious and legal texts (treatises on Christian behavior, confessor’s manuals, sermons, Roman Church canon law, Geneva ordinances etc.) to major works of art (Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet, Titian’s Sacred and Profane Love for example) and to accounts of radical episodes of transgression of the new sexual order: the free love of German and Dutch Anabaptist of the 16th century or the community of women advocated by the English Ranters of the following century.

REL3936
Introduction to Medieval Christianity
Dr. Dupuigrenet

The Christian millennium, from the time of the first Christian emperors and the Church fathers, from the 4th to the 5th century, to the breaking of Christianity brought by the Reformation, in the 16th century, is often for our contemporaries, particularly in the US, a source of fascination and disbelief. Countless novels, films, or videogames, from Mark Twain’s A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court to Ridley Scott’s Robin Hood have acquainted them with a world of monks and knights, magicians and saints, of which they actually have very little knowledge – apart from the existence of papacy and the Inquisition. The dominant view is that medieval Christianity was wiped out by the great Reformers and somehow survived in Catholicism.

In this course, which does not require any prior knowledge of the period, I will introduce students to the history of ten centuries during which European society became Christian, a travailed process of which I will highlight the contradictions and difficulties, very far from the majestic “all Christian world” that we spontaneously imagine medieval Europe to have been. The first part of the course will be dedicated to the progressive delimitation of Christendom, a “Christian Commonwealth” (Respublica Christiana) governed by the Roman pope and defined in opposition to Islam and Orthodoxy, its adversaries from the outside, and paganism and heresies, its opponents from the inside. The second part will exemplify the ways in which Christian society represented itself, with its “tri-functional” division between those who pray (the secular and the regular Church), those who fight (kings and knights) and those who work (peasants, artisans and merchants). The last part of the course will examine the changing meanings of the essential moments of Christian life: baptism, marriage and death, with a particular emphasis on the medieval conception of human love.

Shamanism
Dr. Hellweg

Beyond and sometimes even within the confines of mainstream religion, a range of more emotional, more physical, more mystical practices proliferates for which scholars have developed the term, “shamanism.” Today the meaning of the term has broadened to include both its previous meaning—a spirit journey to an unseen realm—as well as spirit possession, trance, forms of prophecy, and ritual healing and which may include the use of psychotropic drugs. While public opinion and the media may portray some forms of shamanism as demonic, exotic, irrational, or superstitious, they incarnate the deepest longings for and grandest visions of health, divinity, and power. This course explores various forms of shamanism around the world—in Africa, Europe, Latin and North America, and Asia, and in the contexts of global cultural diasporas and immigration. Our goal will be to understand the logics behind these practices that make them sources of power and meaning for those who employ them. Because religious minorities, the poor, women, marginal men, and transgendered persons often become shamans, issues of politics, economics, gender, and sexuality will take center stage. And because there are various ways to explain shamanic experiences, the course will compare neurological, psychological, psychiatric, sociological, theological, and anthropological approaches to them.

REL3936
Special Topics in Religion: Japanese Religions
Dr. Buhrman
The continuing influence of Japanese religions can be seen in a variety of areas—from popular culture, from movies and video games, to international affairs, such as politician’s visits to the Yasukuni war shrine. This course introduces students to the religious traditions of Japan topically, and shows how these traditions can be found in traditional Japanese arts, popular media, and everyday life in modern Japan; as well as how religion has shaped and been shaped by politics and Japanese history. Questions? Contact Dr. Buhrman at Kristina.buhrman@gmail.com (a new faculty member in Religion!)

REL4044 What is Religion? Dr. McVicar
What is “religion”? How and why do we study “religion”? Is “religion” a manifestation of some sacred, sui generis reality that human beings can only dimly apprehend? Or is “religion” a rickety ideological superstructure built on the foundation of colonial, economic, and gendered oppression? Perhaps it’s a psychological projection, a delusion from which humanity must free itself. Or maybe “religion” is simply the creation of the scholar who studies it. This course provides a survey of classical and contemporary theories and methods that have tried to answer these questions along with many others. Through close readings of a sampling of theoretical and critical works, this course will provide students with a basic introduction to the various disciplinary frameworks that underlie the academic study of religion. We will cover a wide array of approaches for studying “religion” ranging from anthropology to psychology, from feminist theory to cognitive science. Along the way we will ask, “what is ‘religion’?” and “and how should it be studied?” We will end the course with two recent books that build on the various methods covered in the first ten weeks of the course. These works--on Scientology, a new religious movement, and popular spirituality in contemporary American culture--offer challenging reassessments of the scholarly and popular category of “religion.” Students should expect a reading- and writing-intensive course that surveys a complex and evolving field of study. Students will be asked to read carefully, offer written reflections on the material covered in class, and present material to their peers. Finally, students will write a final reflective paper assessing the status of “religious studies” in the university.

REL4190 JustTorture? (Honor's) Dr. Twiss
Critical examination of the practices of torture--history, genealogy, social-psychological dynamics, goals, purported justifications, and critique. Of special concern will be the recent torture debate in America, as well as moral and religious perspectives on torture practices.

REL4215/RLG5612 Jews in Graeco-Rom World Dr. Levenson
A study of the direct encounter between Jewish and Greek culture in the Hellenistic and Roman periods. While the course will be devoted primarily to a close reading of the chief literary texts (such as 1,2,3, and 4 Maccabees, Wisdom of Solomon, Letter of Aristeas, Philo, and Josephus) in their social, religious, political and literary contexts, attention will also be given to epigraphic and papyrological evidence. A significant component of the class will be the critical evaluation of three important recent syntheses of this material and the modern scholarship devoted to it. Because of the high level of participation expected and the requirements of an oral presentation and final paper, this course will fulfill the departmental requirement for a "seminar format course".

REL4359/RLG5354 Chinese Religions Dr. Yu
This seminar covers the history and historigraphical issues in the study of Chinese Buddhism. It examines scholarly constructions of Buddhist Studies as a field in general and the historiography of Chinese Buddhism, with a focus on the shifts that took place in scholarly representations and paradigms. The seminar reveals the methodological shifts in the field from philology to philosophy; from sectarian concerns to doctrinal orientations, to anthropological approaches.

REL4359/RLG5354 India: Myth, Map, Image Dr. Erndl
This course explores multiple ways in which India has been “imagined”, for example, as a sacred landscape, as a goddess (Bharat Mata/Mother India), and as a modern nation, through the practices of mythmaking, pilgrimage, mapping, boundary-making, migration (of people and images), and politics. Readings include studies in the religions (especially Hinduism, Buddhism, and Islam), histories, geographies, cultures, arts, and literatures of South Asia, focusing on the question “What (or who) is India?” Film is an integral part of the course; there will be several feature length films screened on Tuesday nights throughout the semester. In keeping with seminar format, students take turns leading discussion on weekly readings and present individual research projects orally and in writing.

Prerequisite: For undergraduates, previous coursework on religions or history of India. For graduates, no prerequisite.

REL4491/RLG5497 Sem Religious Thought: Muslim Theology Dr. Kelsay
Readings and discussion of major authors, themes, and developments in classical and modern Muslim (especially Sunni) religious thought. A particular interest will be the relationship between interpretations of doctrine and judgments about politics.

REL4510/RLG5297 Christianity after NT Dr. Kelley
This survey course covers major developments in the history and theology of Christianity in the first three centuries of the common era. Particular attention will be paid to the interaction between Christians and non-Christians, the articulation of ideas about orthodoxy and heresy, and the development of Christian rituals, ethics, and church offices. Assigned readings focus primarily on ancient Christian texts in English translation. The course format will be part lecture and part group discussion.

RLG5035 Introduction to the Study of Religion Dr. Hellweg
This seminar will review the theoretical and methodological foundations of the academic study of religion. It will focus on authors viewed as the founders and subsequent exponents and critics of the discipline. We will interrogate the arguments and evidence on which they ground the operating assumption that religion exists as an object of study and that, as a result, religious studies exists as an academic discipline. Our approach will be a critical one. We will examine religion as a heuristic category and religious studies as a form of interdisciplinary research in which authors have made arguments as relevant to ritual and symbolic concerns as to those one could also label economic, political, or sociological. We will read and discuss germinal writings by Feuerbach, Marx, Durkheim, Freud, James, and Weber as well as works by their successors, such as Eliade and his students, major anthropologists of the British and French schools, as well as Bourdieu, Foucault, Asad, McCutcheon, Mahmood, Evans, and Vásquez. The course aims to provide students a context in which to hone their own formative questions about and develop their own theories of religion and religious studies.
RLG5305/ENG5801  History of Text Technology Gateway Course  Dr. Dupuigrenet
This course, cross-listed between the Religion and English departments in the History of Text Technologies PhD track, provides an introduction to the interactions between text culture and the media technologies that shaped the way we produce, transmit, transform, receive and interpret creative representations of human experience. This year, because it will be taught by a historian of the religious book it will mostly address representations of religious, mostly Christian, experience, from catacomb art to televangelism.

This course provides an introduction to the interactions between text culture and the media technologies that shaped the way we produce, transmit, transform, receive and interpret creative representations of human experience. It focuses on representations of religious experience, mostly Christian, from Biblical times to the present. Beginning with the two opposed categories of the ephemeral and the monumental in Antiquity, the course will then embark on a generally chronological tour of technologies and their forms: the diversity of manuscript, the evolution of print from the fifteenth to the nineteenth century, the history and theory of reading, visual texts, film, recorded sound, broadcast and digital media. Each of these categories will be explored through a combination of lectures, case studies presented by specialists, and hands-on workshops in the Special Collections department of the Strozier Library.

Requirements: This is the required gateway course for the History of Text Technologies concentration. It also fulfills the general literature requirement for one course pre-1660 or for one course pre-1800, and it fulfills a requirement for the Certificate in Editing and Publishing.

RLG5318  Trans. Classical Chinese Texts (by permission)  Dr. Yu
This is a seminar in the reading of selected primary sources in classical Chinese for the study of Chinese history and religions. The course focuses on introducing students to a variety of tools and methods for the study of Chinese history and religion, including standard lexical and bibliographic references, digital resources, canonical literature, ritual manuals, poetry, and hagiographies, local gazetteers and secondary scholarship in modern languages. The course is made up of weekly group exercises. Special permission from the professor is required to register.

RLG5937  Human Nature  Dr. Day
Rather than addressing human nature per se, this graduate seminarexamines a handful of particularly influential representations of “human nature.” Attention will be paid to the political implications of any and all attempts to anchor normative claims about how we should live in ontological portraits of what we are. Figures to be discussed include, but are not limited to: Plato, Aristotle, Augustine, Rousseau, Hegel, Darwin, and Marx.

RLG5937  REP Colloquium  Dr. Twiss
RLG5937  ARH Colloquium  Dr. Corrigan
RLG6176  Aquinas & Interpreters  Dr. Kalbian
A graduate seminar that looks at the significance and role of Aquinas's moral theology to contemporary debates in ethics. The first half of the seminar will involve careful and close readings of key Thomistic texts on the moral life. In the second half of the seminar we will read work by contemporary interpreters including but not limited to Keenan, Porter, Fritz-Cates, Jordan, and Bowlin.

RLG6498-01  20th Century American Religious Thought  Dr. McVicar
This course investigates the relationship between right-wing politics, culture, and religion during the twentieth century. We will explore the growth of several movements, including the development of the modern conservatism since 1945, libertarianism, the emergence of the so-called “Religious Right, and “fringe” organizations such as the John Birch Society, racist groups, and domestic terrorist groups with connections to the right-wing. Along the way we will reconsider the historiography of the “right” using a host of secondary scholarly research and primary sources (including films, pamphlets, books, and transcripts) to trace the complex relationship between the cultural, theological, and philosophical traditions that shaped the American right from the beginning of the twentieth century to the age of Obama.

RLG6498-02  Religion in the Americas  Dr. Corrigan

SRK5236  Intermediate Sanskrit I  Dr. Erndl
Sanskrit, known as the “language of the gods”, is a classical language of India and scriptural language for Hinduism and Buddhism. As a member of the Indo-European linguistic family, it is related to Greek, Latin, and English, as well as to languages of modern India such as Hindi, Marathi, and Bengali. This is the third semester of Sanskrit. Building on skills learned in the first year, students will increase their speed and confidence in reading Sanskrit texts of increasing difficulty. Writing, grammar, oral recitation, and pronunciation are also emphasized. For continuing students only; permission of Prof. Erndl is required.
